INTERN SOUGHT FOR JOHN SEED DEEP ECOLOGY

At 78 years old, I'm seeking an intern to help me advance my goals and contribute to the growing deep ecology movement. I'm looking for a passionate individual who wants to study deep ecology while learning how to effectively share and expand this work. Your role would involve supporting me in amplifying the impact of my efforts and assisting with administrative tasks.

Interest in deep ecology is increasing, and workshops are filling up quickly. Participants report transformative, life-changing experiences. As my reach grows through podcast invitations and other opportunities, I'm facing the challenge of managing my declining physical and cognitive abilities with age. I'm dedicating more time to maintaining my health and believe the right person could help extend and augment my work in bridging the gap between humans and the natural world.

My parents lived to 99 and 95, respectively, but faced many health issues in their later years. I've spent recent years studying healthspan and believe that with the right approach to exercise, diet, stress management, sleep, relationships, and attitude, it's possible to maintain a vital and active life well into old age. However, maintaining this healthspan protocol is time-consuming, and I often find myself choosing between focusing on my deep ecology work and managing my health.

I'm looking for someone who values this work and sees how working alongside me could enhance their own path. The role would involve supporting me in growing the deep ecology movement and learning how to make a broader impact. We currently host Workaways, HelpX, and WWOOFers at our ecovillage, where young people exchange their work for food and lodging. I'm interested in finding someone who might be excited about a similar longer term arrangement focused on supporting my efforts in deep ecology.

If this opportunity resonates with you and you're able to help, please get in touch. Additionally, if you believe in this project but cannot commit personally, consider contributing financially. An intern would require me to pay for accommodation in the village, food and other expenses. Any support you can provide would help contribute to this crucial shift in consciousness.
